CCJatUA Welcomes New Faculty

Dr. Brittany Gilmer completed her PhD in Geography at the University of Toronto. She also holds a Masters Degree in Urban and Regional Planning with a concentration in International Development. Her research interests include maritime piracy, international crime and security, criminal justice reform in developing countries, critical criminology, African criminology, and qualitative methods. Her recent research about piracy in Somalia has appeared in the journals Feminist Criminology, Punishment & Society, and Geoforum. Since joining the Criminology and Criminal Justice faculty, Dr. Gilmer has taught courses titled Human Trafficking and Pirates and Punishment.

In her spare time, Dr. Gilmer enjoys resistance training and rooting for the Green Bay Packers.

Ms. Taylor Fisher joined the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice as a full time instructor this fall. She teaches Intro to Criminal Justice, Intro to Sociology, Juvenile Delinquency, and Corrections. Ms. Fisher says she particularly enjoys teaching Intro to Criminal Justice and Juvenile Delinquency because her students come to class with robust opinions and diverse life experiences related to these topics. In her courses, she puts those experiences and opinions in context and connects them to relevant research.

Ms. Fisher also works as an academic advisor to students enrolled in the Bama By Distance online bachelors degree program. Her research interests include drug regulation and the treatment of individuals with mental illness by the courts system.

She holds degrees in Psychology and Criminal Justice from the University of Alabama and is an alumna of The University of Alabama’s famed Million Dollar Band.

AMP Students Get a Head Start on Graduate School

The University of Alabama’s Accelerated Master’s Program allows exceptional, motivated undergraduate students to begin pursuing graduate degrees while completing their Bachelors degree. We spoke with Katie Hartig, one of the first Criminology & Criminal Justice students to participate in AMP, about her experiences.

First, what made you decide to do the accelerated master’s program?

I decided to do the Accelerated Master's Program to enhance my knowledge of Criminal Justice issues not currently discussed that semester at the undergraduate level. Additionally, I wanted to get a head start on master's courses since I knew that was the route I would be taking in the future.

What do you hope to do after graduation?

I hope to be working for a government agency after I graduate.

What advice do you have for students interested in the AMP program?

The advice I would give to students interested in the AMP program is to just try it, even if it is just for a semester! The graduate courses will introduce you to higher education, provide an in-depth look into Criminal Justice issues, and allow you to take classes that may not be offered at undergraduate level.

Students interested in a starting their Masters in Criminal Justice while pursuing a Bachelors Degree can find more information online at graduate.ua.edu.

Alpha Phi Sigma and The Criminal Justice Student Association held their Career Fair on January 30, 2019.

Criminology and Criminal Justice graduate students, Kelly Kortright, Rachel McNealey, Carol Ann Sharo, and Epiphany Storey prepare for their presentations at The 74th Annual Meeting of the Society of Criminologists in November.

CCJatUA Goes Virtual

This fall the Department instituted a new fully online Bachelor’s degree in Criminology & Criminal Justice. Jointly housed in the College of Arts & Sciences and the College of Continuing Studies, this online only degree program will expand the reach of the Department of Criminology & Criminal Justice far beyond Tuscaloosa opening up opportunities for students to earn a high quality degree from the Capstone from anywhere in the world. Students can begin having no past college experience and complete their entire degree online. Or they can transfer credit from other colleges or universities and complete their degree at UA. For Fall 2018, we have 27 students enrolled in the program and we expect that to grow to 50 students in Spring 2018. If you know of anyone who would be interested in this program, they can contact the Department directly or find more information at bamabydistance.ua.edu.
Ariane Prohaska and Jeannine Gailey (Texas Christian University) are guest editing a two-part special issue about fat oppression for Fat Studies: An Interdisciplinary Journal of Body Weight and Society. Part one, which includes their co-authored lead article entitled "Theorizing Fat Oppression: Intersectional Approaches and Methodological Innovations", will be in print in Spring 2019.

Stephen Clipper and graduate student Abbey Harbert presented their research, which was coauthored by Zachary A. Powell of The University of Texas at Dallas, at the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences Conference in February. They studied the relationship between income and the duration of clean-up at Superfund Sites across the United States.

Adam Lankford and graduate student Kaitlyn Hoover coauthored an article titled “Do the Ages of Mass Shooters Matter? Analyzing the Difference Between Young and Older Offenders.” In general, earlier research suggests that young people are more likely than their older counterparts to commit crimes because of immaturity, lack of impulse control, rebelliousness, peer pressure, poor role models, and the influence of what they see on television or consume through other media content. When it comes to mass shooters, however, the answer to this question may depend on whether “young” offenders are defined using the legal age of adulthood or the scientific definition of when brain development typically reaches maturity. This study aimed to determine whether significant differences exist between public mass shooters who were younger than or older than 18 years when they attacked, or younger than or older than 25 years when they attacked, by examining 88 offenders who struck in the United States from January 1982 to March 2018. Tests of statistical significance found that with both definitions, young mass shooters were more likely than older mass shooters to obtain their weapons illegally, attack at schools, have a reported history of animal abuse, and admit copying or being inspired by previous attackers. These results were interpreted in the context of previous scholarship, and recommendations were provided for future research. The article appears in the journal Violence and Gender.
Alumni Updates can be provided online at cj.ua.edu/alumni-update-form or by emailing cjdept@ua.edu. Alumni news may be featured in future newsletters and appear online. We’re very interested in hearing from both recent graduates and those already well into their professional lives, so please take a moment to tell us what you’re doing now.
